* Based on Search Institute surveys of 217,277 6th- to 12th-grade youth throughout the United States during the 1999-2000 school year.

What Congregations Offer

Although talking about religion can be very sensitive, especially in public schools, Search Institute researchers found that young people who are involved in a religious congregation are more likely to grow up healthy than kids who aren't involved.

Other research has uncovered similar findings. In fact, research suggests that religious institutions help young people develop in healthy ways in at least three areas:

1 They reduce risky behaviors—Although young people who are involved in congregations can be found smoking, drinking, or engaging in other risky behaviors, researchers found that their levels of at-risk behavior are lower than among kids who aren't active in congregations.

2 They help build a values base—Religious institutions strongly emphasize positive values. That's why it's important to choose a congregation wisely. When you find a congregation that emphasizes what your family values, your kids are more likely to internalize these values and make responsible decisions.

3 They expose young people to more people—Many community programs attract people of one age or one interest. A congregation attracts people of all ages with all kinds of interests and skills. Your child can meet other caring adults and young people who share similar values.

Promoting Assets

Search Institute researchers compared kids who were active in congregations with kids who weren't active and found some big differences in the percentage of 6th- to 12th-grade youth who have these assets:
